Bookmaker Irving Sues Him for my customers. They called me a blackmaller. They were sent by the police, and they ran my Alleged Betting Debts.

Britton Says He Lost $100,000 on the Races, but Is No " Welcher."

Robert G. Irving, the well-known bookmaker at race tracks, accuses Joseph A. Britton of being a "welcher" and has sued him for debts incurred as a loser on the races. Britton is the Chief Agent of the Society for the Enforcement of the Criminal Law. Mr. Irving says that while Britton was at the Morris Park track last Summer engaged in the races at his (irving's) box, and lost neavily, doing all his betting on credit, and that he now repudlates the indebtedness thus in

The suit is for recovery on a note for $165. Pay Demanded for Judge Pitzsimons' dated Feb. 25, and due three months after Attorney Leroy B. Crane brought the suit. The note was one of three given by Britton to Irving, in exchange for several checks for small amounts, aggregating $1,085.

Mr. Irving alleges that Britton approached bim at the track last Summer and said he wanted to bet, but had no money with him. If Irving would take his commissions he might pay him at the close of the races if he was a Irving his check for the amount of his losses.

This is a common practice with the Lorillards, Dwyers and other wealthy sports. Britton was reputed to be wealthy, and had been a famous plunger for years; so Irving accepted the proposition, and as the result, at the close of the season, the bookmaker had several small checks that he had not presented for pay-

Britton, he says, gave him a check for the aggregate amount of the smaller checks, and received the latter back. The check was drawn on the Bank of New Amsterdam, and dishonored when presented for payment.

Then, says Irving, Britton gave his notes, as stated. The one for $365 was not paid when due, and was presented by Lawyer Crane to Britton at the Vendome Baths. Mr. Britton said: " Wait a few days. This is a debt of honor, and I will pay it. I expect to have $10,000 in a lump in a few days, and then I'll The money failed to materialize and suit was Lawyer Crane says it is not a debt of honor.

The Ives Pool bill legalizes betting at the race tracks, and the indebtedness is therefore legal. Besides, Britton gave the notes, not for betting debts, but in exchange for his checks, and therefore for a walld considera-

Irving says he would pocket the loss if Britton had no money, but he believes he has $30,000 worth of rare paintings, picked up during his connection with Anthony Comstock, and considerable real estate besides. While Britton has been so active in raiding gambling hells, disorderly houses and other perate follower of the races and should not be a "welcher." Joseph A. Britton is the proprietor of the aristocratic Vendome Baths, and lives in a fine brown-stone residence at 156 East Forty-seventh street. He received an Evening World reporter in his library to-day. The library abounds in editions de luxe, tree-

"There is more than $80,000 worth of furniture, curios, bric-a-brac, antiques, statuary and works of art in this nouse. My Vendome siaths are worth $40,000. I dely Bob Irving to lay hand on a solitary item-yet I deny that I
